This article will delve into the history, philosophy, and impact of Dead Oceans, providing a comprehensive overview of this influential record label.

History

Dead Oceans was founded in 1999 by three friends: Chris Swanson, Aaron Lenhart, and Phil Waldorf. The trio had previously worked together at the respected Chicago record label Drag City. Their passion for discovering and nurturing new musical talent inspired them to start their own label, which they named after a song by The Velvet Underground.

In its early years, Dead Oceans focused on releasing music by local Chicago artists, such as Red Red Meat and the Sea and Cake. However, the label quickly gained a reputation for its discerning taste and willingness to take risks on innovative and challenging music. Over the years, Dead Oceans has expanded its roster to include artists from around the world, including Bon Iver, Japanese Breakfast, Mitski, DIIV, and Khruangbin.
